How Can I Solve Gmail Attachment Problems

Certain Gmail users have reported that the option to attach files in Gmail isn't always working.

If they attempt to attach a file emails, Gmail gives an error that says:

In turn, they cannot attach documents to emails. Here are some possible solutions for the Attachment unsuccessful issue.

How can I repair Gmail attachment issues?

1. Grant Gmail permissions

The first thing to take care of and that could be the cause of the issue with attachments is to use browser extensions as well as permissions.

This is why we advise users to turn off all browser extensions for a short period (the primary focus is on ad blockers) and then verify that Gmail web client is running with all the permissions.

Click to the icon for padlock within the Address bar, and make sure that Gmail can access all your email. This should help fix the problem. If it doesn't you, then follow the steps listed below.

2. Update the Flash Plug-in

- Then, go to this page which provides the most recent Flash versions.
- Go to this web page if your computer doesn't have the most current Flash version that is listed in the Adobe Flash Player page.
- Choose the optional offers checkboxes if there's no reason to require the additional software.
- After that, press the Install Now button in order to download the Flash Player installer.
- Start the Adobe Flash Player Installer window that is shown below for installation of Flash.
- Then, make sure whether Flash is turned on within your web browser.
- You can do this within Chrome using the Customize Google Chrome button and choosing Settings.
- Scroll down to the Settings page, then click Advanced to increase the options.
- Click Settings , then select Flash to access the options displayed below.
- Choose the Allow websites to use the Flash option.

The default attachment uploader in Gmail uses Flash. It is possible that the attachment uploader will not function with outdated Flash versions.

3. Gmail In Another Browser, Gmail In A Different Browser

You may find that the attachment to files in Gmail works well in a different browser. Therefore, start Gmail in a different browser and then add the file to your email.

Please note that Gmail is only compatible with Chrome, Firefox, Safari, Internet Explorer and Edge browsers.

4. Update The Browser

- Select to the Customize Google Chrome button to launch the main menu in the browser,
- Choose the Help tab and then About Google Chrome to open the tab that is directly below.
- The browser will download updates if they are available.
- Click Relaunch to reboot the browser.

It is also recommended to look for browser updates to ensure that you're using the most recent version. Attachment errors in Gmail tend to be more prevalent in browsers that are not up-to-date.

5. Disable The Proxy Server

- Select the Cortana icon located on the Windows 10 taskbar, and search for "internet options" in your search bar.
- Choose Internet Options to open the screen directly below.
- Click on the Connections button in the image below.
- Hit on the setting button of LAN.
- Choose to use a proxy server as your LAN option, then hit the OK button.

6. Switch Off Firewalls

- You can open Run simply by hitting the Win and R hotkey.
- Enter ‘firewall.cpl’ into the open text box and then click the OK button.
- Click Switch Windows Firewall on or off to display the settings in the next section.
- Choose both Turn off Windows Firewall options on the Customize Settings tab.
- Press OK for the closing of the tab.
- The anti-virus program you use from a third party may also come with a firewall. It is possible to turn an external firewall off by right-clicking on the antivirus software’s notification icon and choosing disable or turning off this option.

The error message for Attachment failed suggests that a firewall could be the reason for the problem.

To ensure that there’s no firewall blocking attachments in emails, you may temporarily disable them.

7. Adjust The Network.http.spdy.enabled Setting In Firefox

- In the URL bar in Firefox for the browser to launch the page that is shown immediately below.
- Next, input Network.http.spdy.enabled in the search bar at the top of the about:config page.
- Then double-click on the Network.http.spdy.enabled setting to switch its value to false.
- Close Firefox and then restart the browser.

This solution is designed specifically targeted at Firefox users. Switching the Network.http.spdy.enabled setting to false can resolve the Attachment failed issue.

8. Consider Alternatives From Third-Party Sources

If you continue to experience problems with Gmail we suggest that you use a different more reliable email client..

These days, email clients offer many advanced features to help you organize your email across different platforms.

Many options include the ability to translate text, spell checkers as well as automated or scheduled mail, as well as amazing search features that will allow you to find particular emails that contain keywords. A lot of them have optical character recognition.

Additionally the best email clients let you create an organized list of contacts and categorize your contacts by groups.

Another crucial thing to be looking for when choosing an email provider is security. Be sure that the option you choose is current and has an encryption option and anti-spam filters.
